

Inherited methods

Tuesday, July 26, 2022 8:46 AM

- toString()
 - All Java data types inherit a toString() that returns a String representation of the data-type values.
 - It will be called when any data-type value is to be concatenated with a String value with the + operator.
 - Its default implementation gives a string representation of the memory address of the data-type value. So, it would be better to provide an implementation that overrides the default.